Summary

Dr Barratt is an NHMRC Research Fellow at the Drug Policy Modelling Program, National Drug and Alcohol Research Centre (NDARC), UNSW, trained in psychology, sociology and public health. Dr Barratt also holds an adjunct research position at the National Drug Research Institute, Curtin University, a Visiting Fellow position at the Burnet Institute, and serves as the Director of Research at the international drug harm reduction community Bluelight.org. Her PhD was awarded in June 2012, after which she was awarded an early career research fellowship funded by the NHMRC to continue her research into the social and public health implications of internet technologies for people who use illicit and emerging psychoactive drugs. Dr Barratt has over 10 years experience conducting mixed-methods research into drug use practices in increasingly digitised societies. Despite a career disruption of 9 months in 2013-14, she has continued to build an internationally recognised research profile, with a particular focus on understanding drug cryptomarkets and other emerging drug use trends.

Presentations

I have presented or co-authored 38 conference papers that were peer reviewed, with 18 of these being presented at international conferences. I have also presented or co-authored 29 presentations after being invited by conference, workshop or meeting organisers, including in 2015, when I was invited to present in the plenary session ‘Dance drugs: then and now’ at Club Health in Lisbon. I have participated in 7 panel discussions and contributed to one invitee-only full-day policy workshop.
